ELMO is an open-source data collection and reporting system designed for use with tablet, SMS or online that is available to Emory faculty and students. Developed by The Carter Center for field research on elections, conflict, human rights, and health in developing nations, ELMO can be adapted for research in many disciplines to make your quantitative and qualitative data gathering and analysis increasingly simple, immediate, efficient and powerful. Join us for an introduction to ELMO and learn more about how you can use this tool for your research project in the field of humanities, social sciences, public health, and others. Open to all students and faculty.

Advanced Doctoral students are eligible to apply for the ELMO Initiative Fellowship – Deadline: Tuesday, January 29, 2019 and Doctoral students interested in using ELMO for short-term field research are eligible to apply for the IDN ELMO Pre-dissertation funding – Deadline: Tuesday, February 5, 2019.
