As the number of elections taking place around the world continues to grow, there is a growing convergence on international elections standards as well as a steady increase in the volume and importance of the work performed by election observers. This panel of internationally recognized election experts will offer their observations and insights about the 2016 US presidential election in light of international election standards.

For the past year, Emory’s Institute for Developing Nations, The Carter Center’s Democracy Program and the International Foundation for Electoral Systems have brought together technical assistance organizations, election observers, election management bodies and scholars to work on developing common indicators for democratic elections. This panel is part of the third workshop of this initiative.

PARTICIPANTS

Gerardo de Icaza, Director, Department of Electoral Cooperation and Observation, Organization of American States

Richard Lappin, Deputy Head of Elections Department at OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights

Avery Davis-Roberts, Associate Director, Democracy Program, The Carter Center

David Carroll, Director, Democracy Program, The Carter Center, moderator

RSVP NOW For more information please call 404 727 6951 or email idn@emory.edu.